Martin spent most of the leisure time had gained in reading, or in dropping in upon his neighbors to discuss the various labor or political problems of the day.

About a week later, Charlie came in from school one day and found his mother working at that everlasting pile of soeks, for besides boarding her husband's two brothers, she also did their washing and mending.

"I say, mother, why don't you strike?" he exclaimed, half in fun, and yet with a sort of disgusted carnestness.

"I have been thinking of it," she replied, in much the same tone; and then, with a sudden determined energy, she added, "Suppose we go to the park for a waik."

Charlie threw his cap in the air, his books into a corner, and responded, heartily, "I'm your man?"

The exhibit of the agricultural experiment stations at the World's Fair promises to be a feature of some importance. It is proposed to show an experiment station in full operation, with its office, laboratories and other departments, thus illustrating how the indoor work of the stations is carried on. We confess to fail to see the importance of this part of the exhibit, which is to be in direct charge of Dr. Atwater, Director of the department of experiment stations at Washington. A far more important feature, however, will be a topical exhibit of the work accomplished by the stations as a whole. In this it is proposed to make a unified exhibit, showing the kind of work done by the stations and some of the more important results they have reached. The preparation of the work is in the hands of a complitor.

In all the history of the Maine State Fair there never was a year when the outlook for a complete exhibition was as promising as at the present time. The State Fair for 1891 will exceed all previous years. Already the calls for spaces, stalls and sheds are surprisingly large. searly as would be desirable. The effort should be, then, not to cut it earlier but quicker. Many times it is better to let sown fields stand till past their best stage, rather than to cut it when half grown.

Another important point is to keep the cost of harvesting the crop at as low a tigure as possible. Hay is low in the market and likely to be, and the owner should have a share of the value left for himself. All unnecessary handling of the hay in process of drying, should be avoided. So far as possible, leave the hay to dry without handling. Many farmers are extremely particular that none of the hay is exposed to dew after being wilted, for fear that it will be more or less colored in consequence. This is all well if it does not cost more than its value to the hay. A

The use of caps costs time, and time is everything when there is so much work to be done in so few days. In the effort to reduce the cost of shaying, it becomes of invoctance to know and the same of the cost of of the haying, it becomes of importance to know and p what not to do.
